

Cattlemen see best year in decade

A long-awaited jump in cattle prices and low feed costs are giving Utah beef producers their best year in nearly a decade.

"1987 has been what could be considered a hallmark year for the cattle industry," said DeeVon Bailey, Utah State University Extension economist. "We have seen the largest profits for cattle during 1987 since at least 1979."

The Utah Agricultural Reporting Service reported that mid September prices for steers and heifers averaged $65 per hundredweight, up $8.50 from a year earlier. Prices for calves at $85 per hundredweight were $24 above the September 1986 average.

Nationally, the U.S. Department of Agriculture reported that average prices for cattle, steers and heifers in September were the highest since August 1980.

In Utah, cattle comprise the largest share of agriculture. In 1986, nearly 33 percent, or $178 million, of the state's cash receipts in agriculture came from marketing cattle and calves.

This year looks to be even better.

Bailey said that in addition to higher livestock prices and lower feed prices the video livestock auction, introduced into Utah last year, helped nudge prices a bit higher. He said 25,000 to 30,000 cattle will be sold through video sales this year, about 10 percent of Utah sales.

Further, he said, the dairy herd buyout — the farm bill-sponsored effort to trim milk production by paying farmers to reduce dairy herds — had depressed cattle prices, but the program ended Aug. 31 so the negative effects of the buyout have been reduced.

Bailey said the beef cattle supply had dropped about 20 percent since 1979, which has strengthened farm prices by bringing supply more in line with demand.

As for feed prices, he said they are a bit higher this fall than last fall. But with high stores of feed grain and a bumper crop expected this year, feed grain prices are expected to remain low.
